THE STAY

THE SURFRIDER, CA

We asked some of our most well-traveled friends to share their favorite getaways in in the States—plus a couple of city hotels that feel like stylish oases.

CALIFORNIA

HOTEL BEL-AIR

“For the scent alone... wood burning fireplaces and blossoming jasmine. Caught in time and feels a world away from LA.”

—Matt Hranek

MALIBU BEACH INN

“A charmingly lowbrow relic of ‘70s coastal Cali surf hotel design, but with all of the high-touch service bells and whistles (read: Toto toilets and world-class wine list) and Scandi-inspired interiors.

From the moment you leave the open-air hallway, the sound of whizzing cars on the PCH disappears and all you see is blue.

The oceanfront rooms make you feel like you could dip your toe into Malibu’s most coveted cove at Carbon Beach.”

—Pilar Guzman

SAN YSIDRO RANCH, CA

“Arriving on a weekend to personalized stationary in your rustic cottage, a blood orange margarita in the garden and a dinner under the stars—you forget you’re only an hour and a half away from Los Angeles.”

—Jack Siebert

“One of my favorite hotels anywhere. Over the pass from Ketchum, on the way to Stanley, is the historic main lodge with a sweeping porch where you can enjoy perfect views of the Sawtooth Mountains. Stay in one of the log cabins with a stone fireplace and hickory furniture. I float the Salmon River and fly fish for cutthroat trout with Verlon the guide. But you can hike, bike, ride horses and end the day relaxing in their outdoor natural hot spring pool.”

“Without question my favorite hotel in the United States and truly one of my top five in the world. The staggering majesty of the landscape is complimented in equal measure by the flawless rigor of the hotel architecture and its interiors. The customer service surpasses itself with every visit.”

HOTEL SAINT CECILIA, TX

“When you’re a touring comedian, your hotel is your home away from home. And when you return to various cities over the years, certain hotels tend to hold a special place in your heart. For me, the St Cecilia in Austin is always a treat. From grabbing a few records from the lobby at check-in, coming home to the glowing SOUL sign over the pool, and the singular decor that feels cool yet comfortable/weird—it’s exactly what you want in your temporary home on the road”—Aziz Ansari

THE LOCAL CHAPTER, TX

THE INN AT KENMORE HALL, MA

“I loved staying here so much that I booked my return trip the minute I got home. I just had to get back to re-experience the beauty of the thoughtfully restored 18th-century Georgian hilltop manse run by two lovely fellas who have created my favorite new retreat. Scott Edward Cole, who has been in hospitality for years and makes a mean cocktail and the most beautiful bacon-y breakfast, and his partner, Frank Muytjens, a gifted fashion designer who led J. Crew menswear during the height of its workwear-meets-preppy heyday, have a gentle but exacting way about them, and a shared aesthetic that favors a pure warmth and richness. They take great care to ensure that you feel more like a friend up for the weekend than a getaway guest. The rooms are spacious yet homey, with warm caramel-colored wood-plank floors, smooth marble mantels and rich textured fabrics on cushy furniture that invites lounging, napping and reading. I can’t remember the last time I relished spending so much time in a room away from home, poring over an amazing array of collectible art, photography and design tomes. The apple orchard overlooking the valley is about to bloom and the expansive new vegetable garden is sure to be ready for harvest when I return soon, very soon.” —Bruce Pask

“It sits atop a mesa overlooking miles of far west Texas desert, which really lends to the secluded feeling that I look forward to when I go out there. My favorite part of staying here is how you can go straight from the desert landscape and into a truly lux-ed out private yurt. This place is seriously beautiful”

GREYDON HOUSE, MA

“Hands down there really is only one place to stay in Nantucket (unless you have some well-heeled friends with a ‘cottage’ on the beach), and it’s Greydon House. Designed by Roman & Williams about 5 years ago, it just gets better as it ages. I might suggest wasting away some days here eating fresh oysters from down the way, chasing them with a G&T and a splash of bitters, then repeating until you lie down in a painfully comfortable bed. I’d say the biggest problem with staying at G.H. Is that you won’t want to leave to experience the charms of Nantucket.” —Douglas Friedman

“A stay here is like stepping back into the ‘60s, in the best way possible. The building’s JFK-era architecture shines through its modern updates, but what I love more are the little retro touches that you discover along the way, a top-notch grasshopper cocktail, and around the holiday season the Christmas tree is decorated with piles of tinsel.”

“A little like going to camp, without the forced group activities. There was a regular cadence to the day that was so relaxing and lovely. A place to go for breakfast... afternoon snacks at 4 every day... cocktails next door every evening... ping pong... reading on the chintz couches in the living room. And there’s also a beach! Heaven. It feels like the best version of old-timey Florida. It’s kind of analog in a way... if Maine were in Florida, this would be it.”
